

HIGH SCHOOL HAS
MANY NEW PUPILS

The High School opened for the new term on Monday morning at 8:15. Fifty-eight midyear Freshmen, and five transfers were added to the enrollment. An additional teacher was required on account of the increased attendance—Mr. B. Morris. He will have classes in English, Civics, and physical education for boys.

The first session of the new year was a general assembly for the purpose of completing the enrollment in the different classes, and the giving of instructions to the new students regarding the rules of the school and the course of study. Principal Ferguson opened the session by wishing everyone a happy new year, and received in response, "The same to you, Mr. Ferguson," shouted in unison by the students.

He then gave the students some New Years resolutions which, if followed, he said would make 1932 a happy new year:

First, I will be neither tardy nor absent from school during 1932.

Second, I will prepare every lesson thoroughly before going to recitation.

Third, I will act each day as if I were in the presence of my parents or teachers.

Fourth, I will do nothing during 1932 that would bring discredit upon Jefferson Union high school.

For the benefit of the incoming Freshmen class Mr. Ferguson explained the course of study and particularly the requirements for admission to the University. He urged every student to strive for the highest marks in order to avoid disappointments later. Only those receiving the highest grades, A and B, he said, would be admitted to college.

The anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's birthday will be observed this year by a special program in the high school. At the November P. T. A. meeting Mr. A. J. Bodien presented to the school a beautiful bronze plaque of Lincoln. This is to remain the property of the school and is to be used as an inspiration in the study of Lincoln's life and character. This year the members of the U. S. History class will prepare papers on some special topic connected with Lincoln, and the name of the author of the best paper will be inscribed on the back of the plaque. A committee of teachers from the history and English departments will act as judges. On Lincoln's birthday the three best papers will be read at the special assembly. There will also be appropriate music.

During the Christmas holidays the storm played havoc with the roof of the high school auditorium. A new roof is being put on this week by order of the building committee of the board—Trustees Bentley, Gehring and Vireno. Mr. Gehring has been donating his time to the supervision of the work.

The use of lipstick by the girls is under the ban at the high school. This announcement was made at an assembly of the girls and the faculty on last Wednesday. Principal Ferguson said that a few of the girls were using lipstick to the point of disfiguring their faces, and that the rule against it had to be made in the interest of these girls.

Night school opened on Tuesday evening for the spring term. There was a large attendance in each of the classes—auto mechanics, English for foreigners, typewriting and bookkeeping. Several applied for stenography and a class will be formed as soon as the requisite number registers. Ten is the minimum number required for the organization of a class. Those who are interested in learning shorthand should leave their names and addresses at the office of the high school.

BEGINS YEAR'S WORK

The regular meeting of the General Pershing Parent-Teachers' Association was held Tuesday at the school, Mrs. Boyle presiding. Mrs. Steele's daughter, Julia, opened the meeting with a touching poem, entitled "Mother." Mrs. Steele reported that the cafeteria operated by the P. T. A. opened for business the first of the week. Preceding the meeting luncheon was served to the public. This was to help defray expenses. The cafeteria was one of the projects the members have worked very hard to accomplish, and they deserve the support of the community.

A projector was purchased and presented to the school to help in the study of visual education.

Mrs. J. Jordan was the speaker, and gave an interesting talk on the work being done by the Philanthropy Center.

Plans were made to hold the February meeting in the evening. This is to be a Fathers' Night, and also to celebrate Founders' Day. Mrs. J. Byrne will be chairlady in charge.

Mrs. Cohen was presented with an emblem for her services as chairman of the last tea held in November.

Mrs. Woodside, president of Woodrow Wilson P. T. A., was present and gave a short talk.

JURY DECIDES BOY
ACCIDENT VICTIM

A bullet wound, "accidentally inflicted," caused the death on Thursday of last week of Joseph Pennings, Jr., aged 15, one of the three youthful San Mateo hunters, it was decided by a coroner's jury last Tuesday, following an inquest held at the office of Deputy Coroner George W. Snider.

The bullet was fired from the gun of Stanley Greene, 16, after the Greene boy had stood the weapon up on the seat of an auto truck in which the boys were seated. This was the testimony of Stanley and his brother George, 13, the only persons present at the time of the accident.

Stanley had just fired the gun and then stood it erect by jamming the butt against the seat cushion and forcing the muzzle against the ceiling of a cab over the seat of the car, he testified. The Pennings lad, seated at the left of Stanley, received the shot in the head as Stanley leaped from the cab, it was revealed.

The older boy said he heard the shot as his feet struck the ground. George was standing on the running-board of the truck. Both Green boys were on the right side of the vehicle and both looking south with their backs toward the Pennings lad when the shot was heard, they testified.

ADVICE SOUGHT ON
BOTTLENECK PLAN

The San Mateo county board of supervisors, at its meeting last Monday, the first session in 1932, requested an opinion from District Attorney Edmund Scott on an initial appropriation of $12,500 toward the Daly City-Colma "bottleneck" elimination project.

The board was requested by Joseph J. Phillips, San Francisco right of way agent, to consider immediate appropriation of that amount toward the work of widening Mission street at Daly City, and El Camino Real from Daly City to Colma. Phillips said the State Highway Commission has already pledged an initial outlay of $200,000 for the work, and the city of San Francisco $100,000, and that San Mateo county must appropriate part of its share now if an early start is to be made. The project is expected to cost $2,500,000 before it is completed. San Mateo county's share has been set at $100,000.

Supervisor Thomas L. Hickey, in whose district the project lies, told Phillips that the board could not act until it had an opinion on the expenditure from the district attorney.

The new ordinance regulating subdivisions in the unincorporated area of the county, first major item on the county planning commission's program, was introduced to the board by Hugh R. Pomeroy, advisor. The ordinance represents county-wide consensus of opinion, and has met unanimous approval at the hands of realty men, Pomeroy said. It will terminate "wild-cat" realty operations such as the county has suffered in the past, according to Pomeroy. The ordinance will make mandatory such improvements as water supply, sewers, streets and lights before a subdivision is approved by the planning commission and the map accepted by the supervisors.

The board will study the ordinance and assured Pomeroy of early action. Mrs. E. A. Chase, of Lomita Park, secretary of the County Federation of Improvement Clubs and Associations, appeared to protest the special $240,000 bond election in the San Mateo high school district next month. The supervisors referred her to the high school board.

A protest was received from the Lomita Park Taxpayers' Association, against the installation of additional street lights, in view of the present tax burden of the community. A petition for additional lights in Lomita was filed several months ago.

A group of unemployed Redwood City men appeared before the board to demand that more men be put to work in clearing the La Honda road, badly damaged by the recent storms, and advanced the argument that these men should come from the ranks of Redwood City's unemployed. It was demanded that something be done to relieve local unemployment, even if it is necessary for the county to "go into debt." Supervisor John W. Poole advised the delegation that eighteen men were already at work on the La Honda road, and that he could put no more than that number to work.

Surveyor James S. James was instructed to make a preliminary survey of damaged conditions in West Menlo Park, which suffered particularly from flood conditions in the recent storm. Surveyor James was also instructed to prepare plans and specifications for completion of the sanitary sewer system at the county memorial park, the work not to cost more than $2,000.

A total of thirty-seven soft drink licenses were renewed.

LEGIONNAIRES URGED TO REGISTER UNDER NEW LAW

Every Legionnaire in the state is urged to register under California's new permanent registration law, which became effective January 1, by William C. Atkinson of Arcadia, state chairman of the American Legion Get Out the Vote Committee. Atkinson stated that it was the duty of all veterans not only to register but to vote at every election.

"Under the new law" said Atkinson, "if an elector registers after January 1, 1932, and votes regularly at state elections, he will remain registered as long as he votes. Should a voter fail to exercise his right of franchise, his registration is automatically cancelled and he must register before he may vote again. It is hoped the act will serve to increase the percentage of registered voters who actually cast their vote at elections."

Unusual activity of the stork during the first eleven months of 1931 showed a total of 638 births in Humboldt county for that period. Deaths for the same period were 439.

STATE PLANS TO MAKE 1933 LICENSE PLATES

Another step toward relieving unemployment is to be taken, according to an announcement from Sacramento that immediate work will start in the manufacture of motor vehicle license plates to be used in California in 1933.

The announcement, made by Russell Bevens, registrar of the Department of Motor Vehicles, said this would provide work for between 800 and 900 men during the next three months, or during the time when the need for jobs is greatest.

Workers in at least five cities will benefit, it was stated. Steel work will be done at Pittsburg, Contra Costa county, finishing work by the Norton Manufacturing Company in Oakland, paint and envelope production in San Francisco, carton manufacture in Stockton, and preparation of applications and forms at the state printing plant in Sacramento.

Plates to be used in 1933 will be black backgrounds with orange letters. This color combination is being used because tests made by Columbia University experts show it provides the greatest degree of visibility.

Plates for 1932, which are now being offered the motorists at all branches of the department, have an orange background and black letters, the reverse of the combination for last year and for 1933.

Motorists are reminded that they have until January 15 to apply for plates. Those who do not apply by this date are not entitled to operate their vehicles.

ANNOUNCES TRAFFIC SAFETY PROGRAM

Every phase of safe driving regulations will be covered in a series of coordinated, state-wide monthly campaigns this year by the California Committee on Public Safety, it is indicated by the program planned by the organization. The 1932 safety effort, which will be similar to the activities conducted by the committee for the past several years, will enlist the co-operation of state and local officials, automobile clubs, the press, radio stations, and civic and service organizations.

The subjects for each month, and the slogans adopted by the committee for use in connection with the monthly campaigns, are announced by Senator Arthur H. Breed, chairman of the state-wide safety organization and a director of the California State Automobile Association, as follows:

January—Failure to yield right of way at intersections. "Watch Byways Always."

February—Unlawfully passing standing street cars. "Slacken Your Gait When Street Cars Wait."

March—Cutting in and other law violations when overtaking another motorist. "Cutting in is a Senseless Sin."

April—Excessive speed at intersections where view is obstructed. "Watch Signs, Avoid Fines."

May—Disobeying boulevard stop regulations. "Stop and Go When Sign Says So."

June—Endangering safety of children at play; speed or inattention. "Drive With Care if Children are There."

July—Railway stop signals (wig-wags). "Wait When Wig-wags Warn."

August—Failure to keep to the right, hogging the road. "Your Half of the Road is Not the Middle."

September—Unlawful speed in school zones. "Obey the Rule—Slow Past a School."

October—Inadequate brakes. "Adjust Your Brake for Safety's Sake."

November—Illegal and glaring headlights. "Lights That Blind Are Most Unkind."

December—Disobeying regulations for protection of pedestrians. "Never Lose Sight of the Pedestrian's Right."

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla. Marvin E. Holderness, vice-president of the First National Bank of St. Louis, says:

That whistling is almost a lost art. When you and I were kids, everybody whistled. Whistlers were poor, good, better and best, but it was a useful art and everybody practiced it, regardless of age, sex, color or locality. There was the shrill whistle used for signal or call purposes; the tuneful whistle that carried perfectly the notes of popular melodies; the short or long exclamatory whistle, denoting pleasure, disappointment, fear, surprise, a note for every sudden change in the gamut of human feeling. Josh Billings once said he could go down into the dark cellar much more courageously if he whistled his way. We whistled in the sunshine and we whistled in the dark. Jimmy Jones, as the champion whistler of Dallas county, back in the '90's, was just as famous as Dick Daily is today, even if Dick is captain and quarterback on the Fordyce High, champions of the state.

A college professor in recent months wrote a derogatory and degrading editorial on the practice of whistling, but it is doubtful whether anybody took seriously his outbursts against the simple and manly art. Surely no red-blooded American would even concede that whistling voices low mentality or evidences an admission of defeat. We shall have to look further for the decline of the practice. Have the radio and the professional entertainers made us ashamed to "pucker?" Or, are we so materialistic that we are getting far away from nature's simple, joyful and profitable usages?

This is just one study on the subject of living happy lives. The sooner we cease to strive for the artificial, the sooner shall we be happy. Let us be our real selves over again, whistling, singing and dancing, and leading the simple life. It isn't necessary for all of us to get rich, and we don't have to keep up with the Joneses. Back yonder some of us didn't see any money but about once a year, and not very much then, but we had three square meals a day, and a warm place to sleep. Too many people expect too much nowadays, and don't realize that they could be happy with much less.

Let us hark back to the good old whistling days.

THIS BEAR DOESN'T BELIEVE IN SLEEPING ALL WINTER

Although bears are supposed to hibernate in the higher mountains when the snow falls deep and the going gets tough, there is at least one large bruin in the Tahoe district that doesn't hold any stock in this winter sleeping business.

A research worker for the Division of Fish and Game who was making wild life investigations in that locality met R. H. Watson and learned about this particular bear.

The meeting with the animal was singular in that it finally ended in a spirited contest, Watson said. It wasn't a hand to hand affair, but a wheel and leg contest, The bear won.

Rounding a curve on the highway between Tahoe City and Carmelien bay, Watson found his automobile face to face with the large furry mammal. Snow plows had piled the season's fall high on each side of the roadway, thus making automobile traffic possible.

The bear displayed indignation and deliberate independence. Instead of making for the tall timber, he wheeled for a race with the car. The challenge was accepted by man and his contrivance.

With the roadway slick, hard and smooth, bruin showed speed plus ability. The race lasted for several hundred yards before the mechanical engine made decided gain on the invention of nature.

Then the bear veered in disgust from the runway. The cool, fluffy snow closed about him as the charging machine roared past. There was a fleeting exchange of real "bear" looks.

The total pack of canned tomatoes in California announced recently by the Canners' League of California is 1,005,507 cases, against 4,245,175 for the year 1930. Canned tomato products for this year amounted to 1,169,850 cases. The Southern California pack for 1931 of canned tomatoes amounted to 155,177 cases.

Governor James Rolph, Jr., has draped his official state car with license No. 1, the first of the 1932 series to be issued. United States Senator Hiram Johnson again receives his old license number—1A2.

Yolo county has cleared its debt with the state for the past six months. County Treasurer Roy Cole has announced that he has paid $387.09 to the state of California in settlement for the past six months' business for the state. Of this sum, $2,341.74 was for state institutions, $103.53 for the sale of state lands in the county and $1,433.77 represented inheritance taxes paid.

Two hundred and fifty universities and colleges of the United States will be represented at the 1932 convention at Berkeley of the American College Publicity Association. It meets at the University of California July 27, 28 and 29 so delegates can continue to Los Angeles for the Olympic Games before returning to their homes. It will be the first gathering of the organization west of the Rocky Mountains. One of the subjects to be discussed is "What Leading Newspapers Print About Education."

Now comes the tree-roosting rat to add its complexities to the household's troubles and the wonders of nature. More than 200 rats were found living in the foliage atop one palm recently, according to Dr. Giles S. Porter, out with new data on the habits of the rodent family. The tree-roosting rats are common in many communities, he insists. The rats make a nest by eating out a cavity among the shoots of the young leaves in the crowns of palm trees, according to Dr. Porter, who said the department of health, of which he is the official head, will prescribe rat guards for trees or otherwise cope with the situation. Plenty of rats, according to Dr. Porter were found in garbage dumps at Richmond, Berkeley, San Jose, Napa, Vallejo, Gilroy, Santa Cruz and Salinas where department investigators investigated methods of disposal of waste. Poison campaigns are expected to abate the nuisance. "During November inspectors of the department collected more than 3000 rats from various cities in Monterey, Santa Cruz and Santa Clara counties, but no positive evidence of plague infection was discovered in any of these rodents," Dr. Porter declared.

Final plans have been completed for the sixteenth annual clinical meeting of the American College of Physicians, largest society of physicians in the nation. The gathering will be held at San Francisco from April 4 to 8, next. There are some 3000 fellows and associate members of the organization and 4000 members and guests attended the last convention in Baltimore. Aiding in the arrangements is Dr. F. M. Pottenger, head of the tuberculosis sanatorium at Monrovia bearing his name. He is slated to become president of the organization.

A material improvement in the price of alfalfa hay in California from the prevailing figures in 1930-31 may be expected, according to information received at Newman by the farm bureau from the University of California college of agriculture. Alfalfa is one of Stanislaus county's major crops, with the output steadily increasing each year as more acres are brought under irrigation.

Winter touring in the Redwood Empire is made more attractive this year as the result of the passing of another serious traffic barrier on the Redwood highway. This latest barrier to be overcome is the notorious Rattlesnake grade extending 5.5 miles south of Farmhouse inn in Mendocino county, widely known as one of the greatest hindrances to the normal flow of traffic on the Redwood highway. Realignment of Rattlesnake grade has been underway during the past summer and the grading is more than 90 per cent completed and the highway has been put in first class condition for winter travel.

Establishment of fifteen labor camps for California's unemployed is discouraging radicalism, preventing desperate men from becoming gangsters and decreasing the influx of professional bums from the East, according to Rex Black of San Francisco, chairman of the California Labor Camp Committee. Mr. Black conferred at Pasadena recently with Deputy State Forester W. H. Coupe, and other Southern Californians active in the labor camp movement. The first labor camp in Los Angeles, he revealed, is established in the Little Tujunga, and will be supervised by the United States Forest Service. It costs about 25 cents a day to save each man to the camps and "California is getting far more than the anticipated value for the camp expenditures," Black said. Tobacco and some essential clothing is furnished and the men get two heavy meals and one light meal daily. "The type of men is rather high," asserted the camp chairman, who said he found in one camp a former captain of the United States Army Air Service, who was delighted at the opportunity to support himself by driving a truck.

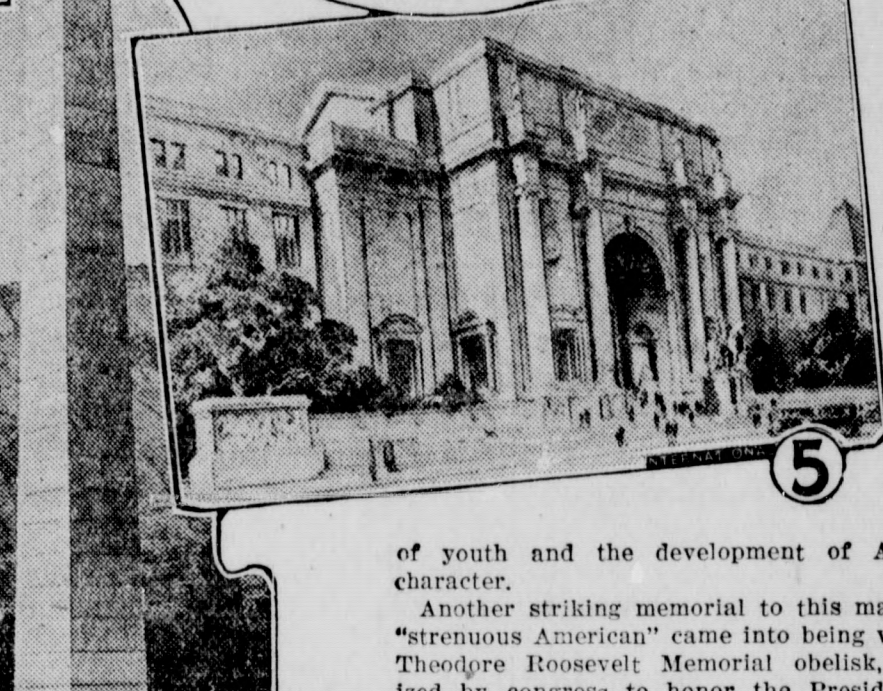

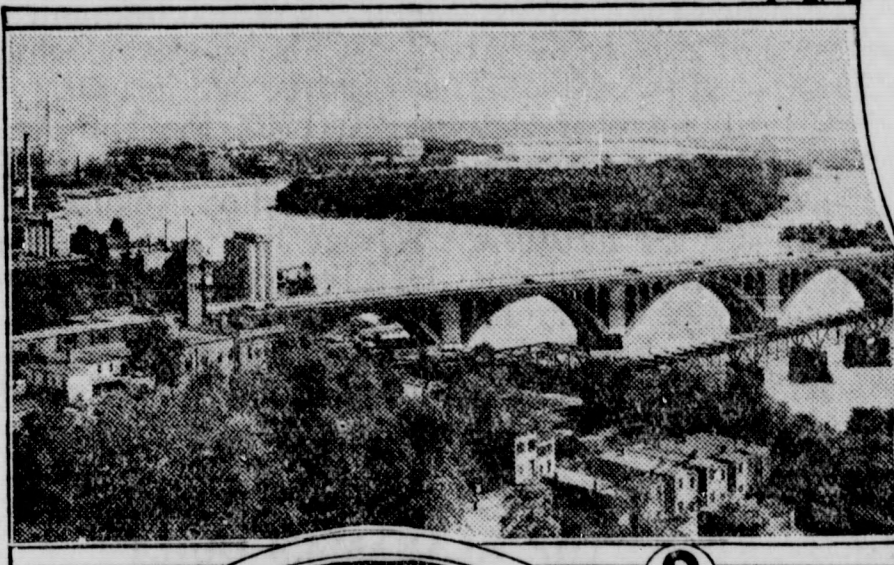

Definite plans to revive the Sonoma Mission Play in 1932, when thousands will visit California during the Olympic games, were announced following a recent meeting held at Sonoma Mission Inn. Professor James Gill of the University of San Francisco, Clyde Edmondson, general manager and secretary of the Redwood Empire association, Joseph Murphy, San Francisco banker, and Sonoma valley leaders attended the meeting. All present were appointed members of a committee to proceed with plans, and they resolved to add to the committee immediately and call another meeting for further organization. Support of the plan was received from representatives of the Native Sons and Native Daughters of the Golden West, League of American Penwomen, the Redwood Empire association, and boards of supervisors of Sonoma and San Francisco counties. The Mission Play was presented in 1923 at Sonoma on the centenary of the opening of the Mission San Francisco de Solano by Padre Altamira in 1823. The valley leaders present included R. E. Emparan, grandson of General Mariano Guadalupe Vallejo, and Mrs. Emparan, Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Murphy, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cleve, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Dodge, and Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Price.

Despite a tendency toward centralization and consolidation of educational institutions, one-teacher schools are still the backbone of Butte county's school system. Thirty-five of the 63 elementary schools in the county are of the one-teacher type, Jay E. Partridge, county superintendent of schools, declared. The one-teacher school, which father and mother perhaps knew more familiarly as the little red schoolhouse, will always be a part of the educational system, Partridge believes. Geographical and other factors make anything but a one-teacher school impossible in many of the mountain districts of the county. The one-teacher school has a few advantages but its disadvantages outweigh its good points, Partridge believes. A student may develop more initiative than in a larger institution, and in after years he may be more capable of pursuing his studies alone. On the other hand, he suffers social disadvantages. He may be the only boy of his age in the school and will not have the opportunity to mix with those of his own age. Girls attending one-teacher schools may lack the society of other girls of the same age. Lack of competition is perhaps the worst handicap with which some one-teacher students must contend, Partridge said.

Warning persons who have recently acquired parrots, parakeets or love birds, to handle them carefully, Dr. Giles S. Porter, director of the State Department of Public Health, declared that psittacosis, "parrot fever" was the apparent cause of three deaths recently in Nevada county.

California sheep raisers are warned by Dudley Moulton, director of the State Department of Agriculture, to guard their herds against infection from foot rot or other diseases as a result of the rainy season.

Perpetuating the Memory of a Strenuous American

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WITH a few notable exceptions, America has usually waited anywhere from two decades to a whole century before paying honor to some of her Presidents with memorials in keeping with the dignity and importance of the office which they held and with their contribution to the history of our nation. So it is all the more remarkable, as well as all the greater a tribute to Theodore Roosevelt, that within ten years after his death not just one, but several, important memorial projects are either completed or are well under way.

A short time ago James R. Garfield, son of President James A. Garfield and president of the Roosevelt Memorial association, announced that Anolatan island, in the Potomac river, a tract of 80 acres in the heart of the National Capital, had been purchased by the association as the site for a national memorial to Roosevelt and it will be presented to the nation to be used as a public park and to be incorporated into the park system now being developed along the Potomac by the National Capital Park and Planning commission.

Bridges will connect the island with the mainland on the north at Roslyn and on the south near the Virginia end of the new Washington Memorial bridge. Ultimately the association intends to erect on the island an appropriate monumental structure, which will be designed by John Russell Pope, architect of the association, and built under the supervision of the National Fine Arts commission and the National Capital Park and Planning commission. Such a memorial, set in so large an area, isolated by the river from the life of the city yet easily accessible, will be unique.

Anolatan island lies due west of the White House, between the Francis Scott Key bridge and the new Washington Memorial bridge, within the territorial limits of the District of Columbia. In its location, its physical conformation and its heavy growth of timber it is the most picturesque area in the district which has remained undeveloped. The land rises slowly on the northern end and sharply on the southern, some 50 feet, to a wooded plateau comprising approximately 20 acres, with a clear view toward Arlington, the Lincoln memorial and the lower reaches of the Potomac. Toward the north the Key bridge, with the towers of Georgetown university beyond, provides an interesting and pleasing feature; toward the west are the slopes of Arlington; toward the east, a tongue of wooded land beyond a small bay, now filled in, cuts off completely the industrial plants which line the waterfront of Georgetown. The island gives an impression of wild country peculiarly appropriate as a setting for a memorial to Roosevelt.

The Roosevelt Memorial association was founded immediately after Roosevelt's death in January, 1919, and raised a fund of $1,750,000 by popular subscription and in 1920 secured a charter from congress. Its aims are, first, to erect a suitable monumental memorial to Theodore Roosevelt in Washington; second, to establish and maintain a memorial park in Oyster Bay, N. Y.; and, third, to perpetuate Colonel Roosevelt's memory by spreading the knowledge of his character and career.

The purchase of Anolatan island is the first step in accomplishing the first aim.

In fulfillment of the second aim, 35 acres of land were purchased in the town of Oyster Bay and a memorial park has been completed at a cost of $650,000. It was formally dedicated on May, 30, 1928, and is now in use. The sum of $200,000 has been set aside for perpetual maintenance. The further sum of $25,000 has been set aside for the perpetual care of Roosevelt's grave in Young's Memorial cemetery in Oyster Bay.

1. Theodore Roosevelt, author, naturalist, explorer, soldier and President of the United States.
2. Anolatan island in Washington, D. C. Proposed site of a national Roosevelt memorial. It is in the Potomac river between the Francis Scott Key Memorial bridge and the Washington Memorial bridge. In the upper left corner of the picture may be seen the Washington monument and in the center at the top the Lincoln memorial.
3. A lookout point on Anolatan island with a view across Little Run to the Virginia shore.
4. The Roosevelt Memorial obelisk in Marias pass on the Continental Divide in Montana.
5. The New York Roosevelt memorial, a part of the American Museum of Natural History in New York city.

Under the third aim the association has established certain institutions and carried forward certain activities, as follows:

1. Co-operated with the Woman's Roosevelt Memorial association in the completion of Roosevelt house, the restored birthplace of Theodore Roosevelt, at 28 East Twentieth street, N. Y., and in its maintenance as a national shrine and point of inspiration for public-spirited citizenship and sound nationalism.
2. Gathered one of the most noteworthy collections in the United States of memorabilia centering about a single individual and established at Roosevelt House a permanent museum for its exhibition. The items, chronologically arranged, cover Roosevelt's entire career.
3. Established, also at Roosevelt House, a Roosevelt library of research and a bureau of information for students, writers, and others desiring information on his career. The library contains approximately 5,300 books and pamphlets, including all the books and articles written by Roosevelt, most of the material written about him, and an extensive collection of books relating to the period (1881-1919) of his public life. It contains, furthermore, 2,500 cartoons, 9,000 pictures, and countless clippings, as well as extensive newspaper files. Every effort has been made to obtain material that is critical of Roosevelt and his policies or adverse to them, as well as material in their favor.
4. A Roosevelt motion picture library has been established, the first biographical motion picture library in the world. Negative and positive films relating to Roosevelt's career and photographed on four continents have been collected and assembled in ten productions.
5. The collected works of Theodore Roosevelt have been prepared for publication in a limited edition and an inexpensive popular edition and published through regular commercial channels.
6. Numerous special publications have been issued, including a collection of Roosevelt's wartime editorials, an account of his life as a ranchman in North Dakota, and a book of selections from his writings for use in schools.
7. For seven years an employee of the association has been engaged in sorting, arranging, and calendaring the Roosevelt correspondence in the Library of Congress for the benefit of future historians.
8. Established Roosevelt awards for distinguished public service in fields associated especially with Roosevelt's career. These fields are: Administration of public office; development of public and international law; promotion of industrial peace; conservation of natural resources; promotion of social justice; the study of natural history; promotion of outdoor life; promotion of the national defense; the field of American literature; the field of international affairs; the expression of the pioneer virtues; the leadership of youth and the development of American character.

Another striking memorial to this many-sided "strenuous American" came into being when the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial obelisk, authorized by congress to honor the President who made forest conservation a national policy, was dedicated at Summit, Mont., last fall. Summit, the apex of Marias pass on the continental divide of the Rocky mountains, is 12 miles west of Glacier park station and 164 miles from Great Falls and the obelisk stands on a line which separates the Lewis and Clark National forest from the Flathead National forest.

This memorial is a stone shaft, 60 feet high, standing on a 23-foot base and bearing two bronze tablets. The tablet facing the east has this inscription "LEWIS AND CLARK NATIONAL FOREST. Memorial to Theodore Roosevelt. This memorial was authorized by a bill introduced in the congress of the United States of America by Representative Scott Leavitt, February 15, 1929, and approved by President Hoover on June 2, 1930." The inscription on the tablet facing the west reads: "FLATHEAD NATIONAL FOREST. Memorial to Theodore Roosevelt in commemoration of his leadership in the conservation of the forests of the United States. 'The forest problem is in many ways the most vital international problem of the United States'—Theodore Roosevelt."

The memorial stands on the Theodore Roosevelt International highway, extending 4,000 miles from Portland, Maine, to Portland, Ore. The formal opening to motor travel of Marias pass, the last link in the Roosevelt highway, took place in the summer of 1930 with a celebration during which Miss Corrine Alsop, a grandniece of Roosevelt, officiated at the laying of the cornerstone of the obelisk which was dedicated last fall.

Last fall also saw the laying of the cornerstone of the New York Theodore Roosevelt memorial which is being erected by that state as a part of the American Museum of Natural History in New York city to symbolize "the scientific, educational, outdoor and exploration aspects of Theodore Roosevelt's life."

According to the plans of the architect, John Russell Pope, (designer of the memorial to be erected on Anolatan island in Washington), the facade of the New York city Roosevelt memorial will be patterned after the triumphal arches of ancient Rome. The entrance arch will rise 60 feet above a base reached by spreading stairs, and is to be flanked by huge columns of granite. On the solid parapet which is to surmount it will be cut the following inscription: "STATE OF NEW YORK MEMORIAL TO THEODORE ROOSEVELT. A great leader of the youth of America, in energy and fortitude, in the faith of our fathers, in defense of the rights of the people, in the love and conservation of nature and of the best in life and in man."

The man himself will be visualized in the heroic equestrian statue to stand on a granite pedestal thirty feet in front of the archway. It is to come from the studio of the famous sculptor, James E. Fraser. The figure is to be in the hunting garb of the west, and mounted on a horse of the type Roosevelt usually rode, especially when he was on his North Dakota ranch.

On either side of the horse and on foot will be the figure of a gun bearer; one a native African, the other a North American Indian. These figures typify his deep interest in two aboriginal peoples, members of which accompanied him so often in his hunting both in the New World and the Old.

Four men who in character suggested the ideals of Roosevelt, and whom he greatly admired are represented in statues of heroic size which are to cap the four classic columns of the facade. They are Daniel Boone, John James Audubon, George Rogers Clark and Meriwether Lewis.

In niches on either side of the entrance arch will be the sculptured figures of two typical specimens of American big game, the buffalo and the bear. The bear was chosen to typify courage and strength; the bison, romance, hardihood and endurance, outstanding characteristics of Roosevelt.

LOOKING FORWARD

Nineteen thirty-two is with us, and with it comes many problems. It is the hope of every one that our economic ills will be overcome, and that the present year will go down in history as one in which we have all accomplished much for the good of ourselves, our families and our fellow men.

But there is no magic remedy for curing economic ills. And how soon our problems will be solved is largely up to us, as individuals, and as members of a complicated society. Conditions might be much worse than they are, and would be if we all lost our sense of values.

Prosperity will return as a result of stimulated employment, stimulated buying, stimulated trade, commerce and building. And it is up to every individual to do his part in order that good times may come again.

Probably when this year has been brought to a close, we will look back and wonder why we were discouraged. But courage and faith must displace gloom and fear if the mists of 1930 and 1931 are to rise in 1932.

HOW TO BUILD A CITY

There is no use in saying that conditions being faced by one city have not been faced by others, because they have and always will be, says a recent writer.

The question is, will the city weather these conditions and come out of the ordeal a bigger, better and busier city? This depends wholly upon the people there and the effort they put forward.

If the citizens have faith and will work, you can rest assured that they can make the future of their city what it should be.

Waiting for prosperity to hit a city is not the spirit a city should have. They should be on the job all the time, developing better things.

Citizens should never rest, but should keep on telling the advantages their city offers, and tell it in a way that will appeal to them. It will cause many of them to investigate and come to stay!

In other words, boost you home town all the time. You know that is the best place in which to live. Tell the world about it!

Congress got a poor pre-holiday start. Bills introduced call for appropriations of not more than six billion dollars.

A Virginia man fainted when he paid his taxes. If they keep piling them on he will probably drop dead next time.

NEWS 200 YEARS AGO

In connection with the two hundredth anniversary of the Maryland Gazette, some early copies of that newspaper were exhibited. The news and advertisements of early days were naturally quite different from what is found in current newspapers, as they reflected the customs and beliefs of their time.

One of the stories from Vienna told of the burning of several persons convicted of witchcraft, among them "a midwife who had baptized 2,000 children in the name of the devil." A local item related the experience of a negro slave who struck a white man in an argument over a dog fight. The negro was sentenced to have his ears cut off "pursuant to the law in such cases."

Among the advertisements was one announcing the arrival of a cargo of "about 200 choice slaves, which will be exposed for sale on Thursday the 22d instant."

In its issue of October 21, 1762, the Maryland Gazette published the news of the birth of a son to the British king and queen, which had occurred on August 12. The story bore the headlines: "Great Joy to the Nation! A Prince of Wales is Born. God Save the King." This was the notorious George IV.

The Maryland Gazette was frequently suspended for varying periods, but is credited by the Librarian of Congress with being "the dean of present-day American newspapers."

THE ALABAMA'S QUILT

In the Alabama department of archives and history in Montgomery is one of the most famous quilts in the world, which finds there its permanent resting place after many wanderings. It is the quilt made by the Confederate women during the Civil war to be auctioned for the benefit of the fund for the building of the warship Alabama, which caused the Federal forces a lot of trouble before she was sunk on June 9, 1864, by the Kearsarge, off Cherbourg, France.

After the quilt was made it was put up at auction, and time and again the successful bidder would donate it to the cause, to be auctioned again. Thus it passed through many hands, and from it was realized much of the money for the purchase of the ship. It finally came into the possession of the family of Mrs. Mary Hutchison Owens, who presented it to the state as a memento of the "Lost Cause."

The Alabama was commanded by the intrepid Rafael Semmes, and during her eventful career of two years captured one Federal steamer and no less than sixty-seven sailing vessels, besides causing the transfer of many Federal ships to the British flag. Her destruction by the Kearsarge, commanded by Captain Winslow, was a great relief to the Union forces.

The Alabama went to the bottom of the sea, the Kearsarge was destroyed long after by being wrecked on a Caribbean reef in 1894, but the Alabama's quilt, made by loving hands in what they considered a sacred cause, is preserved for posterity in the cradle of the Confederacy.

AIDING THE FARMER

Among the many schemes which have been projected in the past few years by politicians and others in real or pretended efforts to aid the farmers of the country, very few have been of practical benefit. In fact, some of them have been productive of more harm than good.

But there is one species of government aid, at least, which has on the whole been really helpful. It is the agricultural extension service, whereby farm and home demonstration agents, trained for their important duties, have gone among the farmers, their wives and daughters, and taught them how to help themselves.

The various field and home projects and demonstrations carried on by these faithful workers, often under the most discouraging circumstances, have materially raised the efficiency of farming and rural homemaking.

Especially effective work has been done with the boys' and girls' clubs; work which will exert a tremendous influence upon the rural life of the future. This training of farm boys and girls for community leadership is perhaps the most important activity for the betterment of agriculture today.

SPEAKING ABOUT GOOD HEALTH

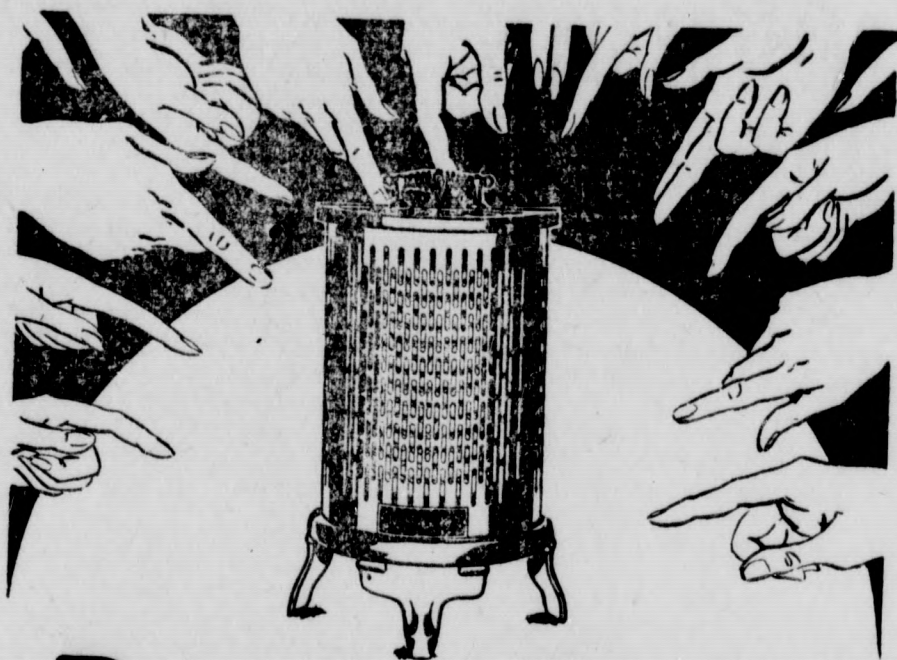

A prominent executive declares that good health is something you owe to your daily work. The value of health in business is universally conceded in principle, but too often ignored in practice. We realize that it is an asset in the race for success and then neglect to do what is necessary to secure and maintain this asset.

An employer knows that a workman or clerk is of maximum value only when he is in good physical condition. An ailment of any kind tends to lower his own efficiency and frequently that of his fellow workmen.

It is easy for a business man to see that his employees should come to work in a healthy condition. But if health is something that any man owes to his job, how much more is it his duty to keep himself fit when his job is that of an executive. If he comes to business nervous and irritable because he has not taken proper care of himself, he is not playing fair with his employees, his business or himself. Moreover, he is cheating himself out of the job which comes from the full exercise of vigorous mind and a vigorous body.

It is not necessary to be a health crank, but only to appraise health at its full value and to increase and conserve it as conscientiously as if it were a more tangible form of wealth.

A New York physician has caused quite a lot of worry by declaring that "worry kills only fools."

WE BACK UP

—This statement with facts: that statistics from the Census Department shows that the average number in an American family is four and one-fifth. We wonder if the one-fifth is father.
Another statement we'll back up is: that if we do the repair work on your car that it won't be done like a schoolboy washes his ears—we'll make a thorough job of it; and when we start on your job we don't waste our time looking for a wrench and then try to find a nut to fit the wrench.

INITIATE PUBLIC DEMAND TO CREATE PUBLIC WORK

Action by all American Legion Posts in California at once to initiate a public demand and bring pressure to bear in order that needed public work, for which there has been authorization, be brought quickly to the building stage, and jobs created, is urged in a wire received by Van Hogan, state commander of the organization, from Henry L. Stevens, Jr., national commander.

"At this time, while plans are being made for a study of the employment situation by the National Employment Commission," said Stevens in his wire, "I wish to call your attention and the attention of all Posts to the vital necessity of speeding up public improvement in order to create work at the earliest possible time."

"In many cases, the need of public improvements has not been brought to attention of federal, state and municipal governments. In other cases, where public improvement projects have been authorized, they are not being rushed through and treated as emergency measures to create jobs as should be done, but rather are slowly following along the regular channels."

"The members of the American Legion, in keeping with the national employment policy, are urged to take the initiative in bringing pressure to bear to start the wheels turning. Public demand will speed up this work. I have an abiding confidence in the good results that you can and will accomplish in this movement."

WILL BEGIN WORK ON THE GRAND CANYON ROUTE

According to information received by the touring department of the National Automobile Club, a contract of $145,000 has been awarded for the reconstruction of a portion of the road between the North and South rims of the Grand Canyon, Arizona. The fulfillment of the contract will initiate a $500,000 highway project for the Grand Canyon National Park to be known as Grand Canyon East approach. Construction of the new highway will begin about January 15, if weather permits.

The new highway will afford an improved connection with Mesa Verde, Zion and Bryce Canyon National Parks. While the road construction to be undertaken immediately covers only two sections—one between Desert View and the boundary line of Grand Canyon National Park, and the other in the Waterloo Hills section, each more than three miles in length—the entire project contemplates a highway more than 30 miles long, which will connect with U. S. Highway No. 89 at Cameron, Arizona.

It is believed that about three years will be required to complete this project, which presents a variety of construction and offers all the difficulties to be expected in such an inaccessible region. A 300-foot viaduct, two major bridges, ten smaller bridges and many drainage structures are included in the plans.

When completed, this will be one of the most scenic routes in the Southwest.

TELEPHONE COMPANY SPEEDS UP ITS BUILDING PROGRAM

In order to relieve the unemployment situation, the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company has decided upon immediate construction of a new $2,500,000 building at the southwest corner of Pine and Steiner streets, San Francisco, to house three of the important central offices of the company. Originally scheduled as part of the 1933 building program, this work has been moved ahead as a contribution to alleviation of the unemployment problem. The company has also advanced several other construction projects from twelve to eighteen months. These projects approximate $10,000,000 of construction work.

OLD RULES BEING UPSET

In a recent interview, Walter Dill Scott, president of Northwestern University, the largest Methodist institution of learning, discussed the indifference to religion which is apparent among present-day college students and graduates. He frankly admitted that the colleges had encouraged the material viewpoint and said:

"Science started the trouble. We taught our youth the scientific history of mankind, which upset their religious trainings, and we gave them nothing to replace their old creed. We threw away the old tool before we had developed the new."

"In the early days there were certain fixed rules which governed life. This shall thou do and this thou shalt not do. Today these rules are all topsy-turvy. We are in a transitional stage. We can't teach our students any one set of rules, because we don't know what they are ourselves."

The substance of Dr. Scott's conclusions is that ultimately the old creeds will be abandoned to a great extent, in view of the revelations of modern science. The process involved in the development of a new and rational religion is what he describes as "a transitional stage."

Tests by the Forest Service have shown that hickory is the heaviest wood grown in the United States, and western red cedar, when green, the lightest.

PRECEDING EVENTS

Joe Barry, country youth in New York, ekes out a living as caretaker in a poor rooming house and accordion player in Louis Bertolini's restaurant. Lured by the open country, he spends a night in the fields, neglecting his duties. Next day Bertolini discharges him. A frequent visitor to Bertolini's offers him $10,000 to impersonate a "bootlegger" in trouble. It means a penitentiary sentence for Joe, and he hesitates. The man, "Martin," gives him $1,000 "on account." Next day Joe deposits $300 in country banks, giving his name as Joseph Bradley. A circus attracts him. Outside a tent he sees an accordion and is tempted to play it.

He used the bellows softly, surreptitiously, as if he were actually stealing the melody. A truly professional instrument like this had figured in many a dream of Joe Barry's; the music of true steel reeds, the soft action of delicately balanced piano keys, the instant response to pressure; unconsciously his fingers played more swiftly upon the keys and the pull of the bellows grew stronger; the circus faded.

"That's pretty," a voice said. The music ceased. Joe Barry felt the blood streaming into his face; he gulped and hastily replaced the accordion upon the chair.

"I didn't mean to play it," he said boyishly. Dazedly he realized that the girl who faced him, now in street clothing, had been a person of silk and tulle when he last had seen her, swinging gracefully about the center ring of the circus upon a dappled gray horse. Then haltingly: "It's yours I guess?"

"It's in my act," she said. A pause followed, awkward yet natural, the mutual dispensing of all else while two young persons took stock of each other. The girl was young, only a year or so more than twenty. She was vibrant and alert; with something more in the blue depths of her eyes than mere beauty. The sun came gliding about the end of the little tent and crept into her hair, weaving a thousand meshes of gold there. She straightened; the clean-lined vivacity of her rounded into evidence even under the handicap of clothing. Suddenly she said:

"Why don't you play some more?" Joe Barry stammered. "I don't know many things," he fenced and belied himself by reaching eagerly for the gleaming instrument on the chair. "I'm sort of out of practice. You see," he confessed, "I've been working in a place where it doesn't make much difference."

"In a theater?" asked the girl. "No, I was just an entertainer." He laughed. "My job and I parted company, so I thought I'd take a run out of town for a day. I'm glad I did now." Then he quickly fenced. "A fellow doesn't get a chance to meet up with an lorio every day."

"A what?" asked the girl. "This kind of a professional accordion. Know much about accordions?"

"I'm afraid not," the girl confessed and came closer. "You see, Uncle Dan—Mr. Dayton, you know—"

"Oh, he's your uncle?" asked Joe Barry, somewhat awed. "Yes, I'm Sue Dayton." She smiled at the impressed look in his eyes. "My father and Uncle Dan were partners, until Dad died. Uncle Dan really reared me in the ring; Dad always looked after the business end of the show."

"I see." In fact, Joe Barry had paid little attention. Now with quick fingerings, he drew a soft melody from the responsive instrument in his grasp. Then again: "Gee, I oughtn't to be fooling around with this; it's too valuable."

"I wish Blackie Jordan thought so," said the girl. "He's the fellow who plays for you?" queried Joe.

"You saw the act, did you?" "Yes," Joe was awkwardly silent. The girl smiled.

"Well, go ahead and say it. You didn't like it?"

"Oh, I liked you."

"But you didn't like the act? Well," the girl's face faded into a youthful maturity. "I know it isn't what it should be. You see, in the beginning, the idea was fine. There was a young Italian on the show then who could play the accordion. So we decided on dressing Lombardi in a Pierrot costume, the same white silk one that Blackie wears now, and shutting off the rest of the show and having him sing and play in the center of the ring while I rested between turns. We could do that all right; the tent is small enough for a voice to reach all parts of it. Can you sing?" she asked naively.

"Yes, I sing some," Joe Barry confessed. "I used to sing a lot."

"I thought you did. I heard you humming when you first started to play."

"Was I?" He laughed. "I didn't notice."

"I gathered as much. Well, you'd understand what I mean, then. Lombardi had intended to put on a straight clown make-up—not the funny kind, you know, but just white, with black diamonds on his forehead and cheeks. I was to dress as Pierrette, and he would sing to me. But of course," she added as though Joe Barry knew all about it, "he was hurt just a week before we opened, and I don't suppose he'll ever be able to troupe again. We'd already spent all this money for the best accordion Uncle Dan could buy, so we thought we'd salvage what we could. Of course Blackie only plays a little and he hates it, so he doesn't help much."

"You know, I thought that! I kind of felt he hurt things," Joe confessed. "You were so—so pretty and graceful, riding around there and so, oh you know, sort of fresh and sweet looking and everything—"

"Be careful!" Sue Dayton laughed and grasping a guy rope, put her head against her upraised arm.

"Well—you know, I was just telling you what I was thinking. He didn't seem to take much interest. Then I got to thinking, how pretty that all would be if there were somebody in there who just loved to play. This way, Blackie—is that his name?—is just there. But it seemed to me that he ought to come in, like he'd followed you, and play as he entered the ring. And you would pose and throw kisses to him from upon the horse. Of course, it was kind of silly. I've never seen anything in a circus like that."

"Silly?" The girl had touched his arm. "Don't you know that it isn't silly to think of such things, just because they've never been done?" Suddenly she whirled, and called: "Uncle Dan!" A red-faced man with gray hair and a bulbous nose halted abruptly in his swift course from the pad-room entrance of the big top.

"Well, what is it? What is it, Sue?" he asked. Then he noticed Joe Barry. "Want to see me, young fellow?"

"No, but I do," the girl broke in. "We've just been talking—about my act. He has the most wonderful idea for it. And I thought maybe the three of us could talk things over—maybe—"

"Uncle Dan!" A Red-Faced Man With Gray Hair and a Bulbous Nose Halted Abruptly.

"Looking for a job?" asked Uncle Dan. "Play that thingamajig?"

"Beautifully!" said the girl.

"Looking for a job?" asked Uncle Dan again.

Joe Barry stammered.

"Well, I don't know—yes, I guess I'd sure like one—"

"Sing?"

"Yes, sir."

"Sue here says you've got ideas. Sue's a pretty good judge. Let's have them." Suddenly, he veered. "What's your name?"

A sudden constriction rose in Joe Barry's throat; he strove to cover it with a cough. He felt his features grow cold and suddenly hot. "Bradley's my name, sir," he said at last.

Old May-Day Custom

In the Gentleman's Magazine for 1754 a custom is alluded to that only of late became obsolete, says "Brand's Observations on Popular Antiquities." "They took places in the wagon, and quitted London early one May morning, and it being the custom in this month for the passengers to give the wagoner at every inn a ribbon to adorn his team, she soon discovered the origin of the proverb, 'as fine as a horse'; for, before they got to the end of their journey, the poor beasts were almost blinded by the tawdry party-coloured flowing honours of their heads."

The summer palace of the Princess Reuss, at Greiz, in Thuringia, in the foothills of the Saxon Erzgebirge, contains a valuable collection of art works. Of especial interest is the collection of 8,000 copper engravings, including 800 mezzotint engravings after pictures by Sir Joshua Reynolds. Counterparts of these exist only in the British museum.

The collection was made by Princess Elizabeth, daughter of George III of England.—German Tourist Bureau.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

PETER RABBIT TRACKS HIS NEIGHBORS

IT WAS a perfectly glorious night. Mistress Moon flooded the Green Meadows and the Green Forest with silvery light, and the white snow which covered everything helped to make still more light. In fact it was almost as light as day, it seemed to Peter Rabbit. In spite of all little Mrs. Peter could say he had started for the Green Forest just as soon as jolly, round, red Mr. Sun had gone to bed behind the Purple Hills.

"It's just like visiting a new world," thought Peter as he reached the edge of the Green Forest. "I do wish that Fuzzy wasn't so timid." By Fuzzy he meant little Mrs. Peter, who you know, was once Miss Fuzzytail. "She thinks that just because my coat is brown and everything else is white it is a great deal more dangerous here than when there isn't any snow. She doesn't know what wonderful hiding places there are everywhere now. The snow has bent down all those little hemlock trees and the lowest branches on the big hemlock trees so that under them are the most wonderful caves. Why, I can jump out of sight almost anywhere here. Hello! I wonder who made those funny tracks. I believe I'll follow them and find out."

It Was Whitefoot, the Woodmouse.

The tracks were just the tiniest of little dots with a tiny little line between the two rows. That line puzzled Peter. You know he is not used to tracking his neighbors. Of course the double row of dots were the prints of tiny feet, but what made the line? Peter followed as fast as he could, which wasn't so very fast, because the tracks wound about so much. Presently they led to an old log covered with snow. In one side of it was a little hole, and right there the tracks ended.

"Hello!" called Peter. "Hello yourself and see how you like it!" replied a squeaky little voice.

Peter chuckled. He knew that voice. "Why don't you come out and be polite when you have callers?" he said. "Did you say callers? Who is with you, Peter Rabbit?" asked a squeaky voice.

"Well, a caller, if you like that better. There is no one with me," replied Peter.

Right away a pretty little head with the loveliest soft eyes appeared at the hole. It was Whitefoot, the Woodmouse. "Excuse me, Peter, if I seemed to be a little bit impolite," said he. "I have to be very careful these days. I can't afford to take any chances when there are so many hungry people about. How did you find me?"

"Easy enough," replied Peter. "I just followed your tracks, though I didn't know whose they were." Whitefoot sighed. "That is the trouble with snow—it is a regular telltale," said he. "One cannot move while it is soft without leaving tracks. It tells all one's secrets. Better watch out, Peter, that some of your enemies don't catch you by means of your tracks; they are very easy to follow."

"I'm not worrying," declared Peter. "If they can see my tracks I can see theirs, so it is an even thing. It is great fun to follow tracks. By the way, Whitefoot, how do you make that funny little line between your foot-prints?"

"With my tail, of course. How stupid of you not to know," replied Whitefoot. "A long tail is rather a nuisance sometimes," he added. Peter chuckled. "Mine doesn't bother me," said he. "I'm very glad to have found out about your tracks. Next time I will know them. Now I am going to see who else I can follow. It isn't often I have such a chance, and it is great fun. I expect I shall learn a whole lot about my neighbors."

"Watch out that they don't learn some things about you that you would rather keep secret," warned Whitefoot. But Peter just laughed and went on his way.

WALL OR ROAD

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

Walls, fences, borders, what are they. That shot and shell may shoot away? The barriers that hold us back Are not the forts that men attack. But barriers we seem to build Within ourselves. The world is filled With men who failed. I wonder why? So oft a purpose seems to die With not a battlement before. Peace has defeat as well as war, And more dreams die by their own hand Than some attack some foeman planned.

Well, first we build a wall of doubt About ourselves—ourselves shut out From cities that we dream to take. The wall the first of all to break. Whatever victory we want, Is that old wall that says, "I can't." If thus you think, no other man Is much inclined to think you can. Who doubts himself has built a wall Around himself the first of all. And now must spend his strength and time His self-made barrier to climb.

And, even if he scales the top, There is another thing to stop His progress: 'tis the twisted wire Of folly, habit and desire. The brambles that will bar his path Are often but the fruits of wrath From seeds that he himself has sown. I bid you never plant your own And you will find a passage through The pits that others set for you, If you yourself no pits have set Of futile sorrow and regret.

Yes, men will fall, and fall again, Because they drag a ball and chain Of foolish pleasure, doubt or fear. But, if you keep your vision clear, Your purpose true, your morals clean, Life has no bounds, luck no desmesne. How far a man may go, my friends, How high he climbs, how low descends, Depends, whatever fortune brings, On him, and not on other things— Not on his luck nor on his load, But if he builds a wall, or road.

Mother's Cook Book

FOUR GOOD THINGS

WHEN you want to serve an exceptionally nice frozen dish, try:

Apricot Henri.

Take one can (two and one-half pounds) of apricots, put through a sieve, add to the fruit one-fourth cupful of lemon juice, one and one-half cupfuls of orange juice, one cupful of sugar and a pinch of salt. Mix well and freeze.

Orange Blossom Salad.

Peel small navel oranges and remove all the white membrane. Slice firm heads of lettuce in three-fourths inch slices, place an orange on the lettuce and open the fruit so that it resembles the petals of a flower. Moistened the fruit and lettuce with a snappy french dressing and top with a spoonful of mayonnaise mixed with whipped cream.

Divinity Balls.

Cook one and one-fourth cupfuls of sugar, one-third cupful of light corn sirup, one-fourth cupful of water, one-eighth teaspoonful of salt to the hard ball stage. Leave the saucepan over the burner after the heat has been turned off. Beat one egg white until stiff. Pour over the hot sirup very slowly, beat until the mixture holds its shape. Add one-half teaspoonful of vanilla, one cupful of sliced dates and one-half cupful of nut meats; mix thoroughly and turn out on a marble slab, make into balls and roll in toasted or tinted coconut. This makes one and one-fourth pounds.

Basic Energy Soup.

Take two and one-half pounds of veal or beef soup meat and bone. Brown half the meat before adding the water. If light stock is desired use veal and do not brown. Cover with two quarts of cold water. Have the bones crushed and simmer for two and one-half hours. Do not allow it to boil. Now add the vegetables and cook another hour. Strain, chill and remove fat. It is now ready to be served with other vegetables or noodles.

Pineapple Salad.

Place a ring of pineapple on lettuce and arrange three balls of cream cheese on each. Fill the center with mayonnaise and serve.

NEED CONFIDENCE TO RESTORE PROSPERITY

By ARNOLD J. MOUNT,
President of Bank of America N. T. & S. A.

If the economic world during 1932 is to reestablish the era of prosperity that existed prior to the end of 1929, a complete restoration of confidence is necessary.

Without confidence, maintenance of relations between nations is impossible; functioning of the credit machinery of the nations of the world is crippled; and the conduct of business relations between individuals and institutions is checked to subnormal limitations.

Work and craftsmanship of ages has not come to an end. Industry and corporate structures throughout the universe have values potentially greater than individuals presently appraise. The ambition of civilized mankind is increasingly extended so that private endeavor tends to overcome community effort.

At the present time the great majority of industries are functioning satisfactorily, although not reaping the profits that existed in more prosperous periods. Few have thus far been in the distressed condition that their security appraisals would indicate.

Yet lack of confidence has been such as to cast a pall over those factors which the world approved with reckless abandon less than thirty months ago.

The economic structure is akin to a pendulum of a clock. The farther it swings in one direction, by the same proportion does it go to another, and takes longer time to reach a normal swing.

Those lacking confidence should realize that the past era of extended prosperity is being followed by a corresponding period of depression, and that the return to normal conditions must take a proportionately longer period of time than in previous business cycles.

Upon this assumption maintenance of restoration of confidence is logical and from this a sounder foundation for the future economic structure can be built.

HUNTER MAKES WAR ON MOUNTAIN LIONS

Records so far show that Jay Bruce, lion hunter for the Division of Fish and Game, has taken twenty-five mountain lions during the past year. Many of these carnivores were taken in game refuges maintained by the state. According to J. S. Hunter, in charge of the bureau of refuges, this record of more than two lions per month for one hunter is considered excellent.

Bruce said that a mountain lion is estimated to kill at least one deer per week. Many other animals, such as sheep, cattle and horses, suffer from the depredations of lions unless afforded protection.

The average life of a lion under normal conditions is 16 years, the hunter said. If a person cares to do a little estimating, it can be readily seen that many deer have been saved through the activities of this hunter alone—rates of increase in the lion family and many other points must be considered.

Bruce has been hunting lions for the state since the year 1919, and has killed more than 400 during that time, records show.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.
That there is nothing that so appeals to the buying public as good advertising.

The greatest opportunity for expanding a business is through the printed page.

It teaches the buyer to do business with the firm that advertises.

Many successful business concerns use a friendly style in their advertising—a sort of friendly, chatty way of telling the public about their business and what they have to offer.

Business concerns that are well advertised are known as leaders in their line of business.

They keep the public talking and thinking about their business.

That is why their goods and service are always growing in popularity.

There is no better indication of the public's regard for advertised goods than the reputation that manufacturers of quality and advertised goods have.
